7 Tips to Successfully Transfer Wealth to Your Heirs

Now through 2048, an estimated $124 trillion in wealth will transfer to the next generation.

This is the culmination of years of hard work and careful planning, and it will take effort to manage the transition in a way that will preserve family wealth into the future. Included are seven tips that can help you navigate the process.

01

Communicate frequently.

Talk to your children about your fears and beliefs about budgeting, investing and planning. Reinforce the steps you took that got you to this point in life, and continually restate your values. If they don't learn from you, they may be influenced by the financial habits of their peers. Your children need to understand the responsibility that comes with the wealth they'll receive.

02

Consider gifting.

Annual gifting is one of the easiest ways to pass wealth to the next generation. In 2025, you can gift up to $19,000 to as many people as you wish without any tax consequences or requirement to report your gifting to the IRS. Married couples can gift up to $38,000.*

03

Review your estate plan.

An estate plan is an important aspect of strong financial planning and should be continuously updated and monitored. We recommend reviewing your estate plan with your financial advisor on an annual basis.

04

Incorporate a GRAT into your estate plan.

A Grantor Retained Annuity Trust (GRAT) is an estate planning technique that can help minimize wealth transfer tax liability. Rather than your beneficiaries having to pay estate taxes, you will pay taxes when the trust is established. Assets are placed in the trust, and then an annuity is paid out to you each year during the term of the GRAT. When the GRAT term expires, the beneficiary receives the assets tax-free. This will allow your kids to benefit from the future appreciation on your assets; however, you retain some control. GRATs can be an effective way to transfer wealth and educate the next generation about your estate plan during your life.

Once a GRAT is established and funded, it is set for the predetermined term. Lack of flexibility and access to other funds need to be taken into consideration. A GRAT may be a useful tool as a standalone strategy or in combination with other strategies. The cost of establishing and administering the trust should be carefully considered with your advisor(s). A GRAT is not a strategy that is meant for everyone. However, when used appropriately, it can be a great tool for effective wealth transfer.

Set up an Irrevocable Life Insurance Trust (ILIT).

An ILIT owns your life insurance policy for you, removing it from your estate. You can dictate who your initial beneficiaries will be and define the terms under which they will receive benefits, such as how and when your wealth will be distributed. An ILIT protects your wealth from creditors, allows some control over your assets, and avoids estate taxes.

For ILIT assets to avoid estate taxes, the beneficiary must have access to any annually gifted funds by you for 30 days. Proper notification to the beneficiary is required. Administration of an ILIT can be complicated and may require a corporate trustee to ensure all requirements are being met. Fees for a corporate trustee—as well as legal fees—should be taken into consideration when considering this strategy.

06

Timing is everything.

When it comes to sharing your wealth with your children, it's important you inform them at the right time and distribute wealth accordingly. Each situation is unique, so discuss the optimal time to discuss/distribute wealth with your financial advisor. Together, you can develop an effective game plan.

07

Evaluate your life insurance policies.

Regularly reviewing your life insurance policies with your financial advisor helps to ensure that you are in a strong position to provide tax-free benefits to your beneficiaries. You can also use life insurance to provide liquidity for your beneficiaries to pay any estate taxes.*

*The cost and availability of life insurance depend on factors such as age, health and the type and amount of insurance purchased. Before implementing a strategy involving life insurance, it would be prudent to make sure that you are insurable by having the policy approved. As with most financial decisions, there are expenses associated with the purchase of life insurance. Policies commonly have mortality and expense charges. In addition, if a policy is surrendered prematurely, there may be surrender charges and income tax implications.
